CITY OF TAMPA FAQs

Q: Who can run for office?

Residency qualifications vary by position, but you must be a registered voter to run.

Q: When does the City of Tampa hold its elections?

The City of Tampa has elections on the first Tuesday in March, every four years. The next election is March 7, 2023.

Q: What do I have to do to run for office?

The first step is to file for office by submitting paperwork that officially declares your candidacy. This can be done at any time but must be done before you start campaigning. After filing, you are required to submit regular financial reports detailing campaign contributions and expenditures.

Qualifying takes place during a scheduled time period and is the process by which you assure your name will be on the ballot. That's when additional paperwork, along with any required fees or petition certifications, will be due.

Q: Does it cost money to be a candidate?

Not necessarily. You have to pay a qualifying fee or collect petitions to have your name placed on a ballot. The fee is waived if you submit enough petitions.

Q: How are the qualifying fees set?

Fees are 6% of the salary of the office as of July 1, 2022.

Q: Which offices are partisan, and which are nonpartisan?

All City of Tampa municipal offices are nonpartisan.

Q: Will the Supervisor of Elections Office help me fill out the required forms?

We'll give you forms and direct you to election law and candidate guidelines provided by the state of Florida and the City of Tampa. However, we are by law a ministerial agency, which means we cannot advise you on your paperwork.
